

A joyful stay at The Swan, Tarpорley

Did you know?

The Swan has the oldest function room in England, dating back to 1762

Clockwise: the welcoming bar, my blissful bed, excellent wines

When Shire sent our reviewer to report back on the popular Cheshire coaching inn, we nearly lost him for good...

Tarpорley is one of those villages that seems to exist just slightly outside of time – unspoiled, welcoming and quietly stylish. At its heart sits The Swan, a striking Georgian coaching inn that has been serving weary travellers and cheerful locals for centuries. Dating back to the 1500s, The Swan is steeped in history but it wears its heritage lightly: never stuffy, always full of life.

Behind the historic exterior you'll find modern styling and friendly service

Arriving for a weekend stay, I was immediately struck by the sense of warmth and character that radiates from every corner of the place. The inn has evolved beautifully with the times: interiors blend original features with contemporary comfort, and the whole space carries an easy, unpretentious elegance. The bar is lively and atmospheric, full of the gentle clink of glasses and the buzz of conversation this is, quite simply, a joy.

Upstairs, the rooms are calm and inviting. Mine was an airy, characterful space with classic touches – plush throws, polished wooden floors, and a bed so comfortable it was hard to peel myself away from it. A stylish modern bathroom, thoughtful amenities and those all-important details (fresh coffee, fluffy towels, generous space) made it feel like a real escape from the everyday.

Dinner at The Swan is to be lingered over. The menu is rooted in seasonality, with a focus on quality local ingredients presented with flair but never fuss. I chose sea bass fillet with crushed new potatoes and a saffron cream sauce, which was perfectly balanced, beautifully cooked. From the artisan sourdough starter to the indulgent sticky toffee pudding, every bite was a pleasure. The wine list is smart and well-curated, and service was faultless: knowledgeable and refreshingly down-to-earth.

What really sets The Swan apart is its spirit, a kind of relaxed exuberance that stays with you even after you've checked out. Perhaps it's the history in the walls, or the laughter in the bar, or the feeling that you've stumbled on somewhere with real soul.

For anyone exploring Cheshire, or simply in need of a relaxing break with good food and genuine hospitality, The Swan in Tarpорley is the perfect escape. ■
